

A former music journalist and executive for Starbucks, Corey duBrowa has been Google's vice president of global communication and public affairs since April 2018.

Before arriving at Google, duBrowa worked at Salesforce, where he served as executive vice president and chief communications officer. During his time there, Salesforce earned the top spot in Fortune's "Future 50," which is a list of the most innovative companies in the world. Also during that time, Salesforce was recognized as Forbes' "innovator of the decade."

Before Salesforce, duBrowa worked at Starbucks for seven and a half years, where he held the position of senior vice president of global communications. While at the coffee giant, he helped lift it to the status of fourth-most-admired brand in the world, according to Fortune.

Over the last two decades, duBrowa has garnered a number of industry awards, including four Sabres, two PR Week Global awards and three PRSA Silver Anvils. He has also been honored with the University of Oregon Alumni Association's Jeanne Johnson Service Award. (For two years, DuBrowa was President of the Alumni Association and on the board for nearly 10).

A current member of the Arthur W. Page Society's Board of Trustees, duBrowa also serves on the USC Annenberg School's Board of Advisors. For 20 years, duBrowa was a music journalist; in that role, he generated over 1,000 bylines in a variety of publications, including Rolling Stone, No Depression and GQ.